

The Tre Spade "Takaje" vacuum system at the Expo 2010 Shanghai

The Ministry of Public Administration and Innovation and the General Government Commission for the 2010 Shanghai Universal Exposition have chosen Takaje as an innovative product Made in Italy to highlight the high quality innovation manufactured in Italy.

The innovative Takaje vacuum system, invented and manufactured by Tre Spade in co-operation with Adriano Design, will in fact play a leading part at Expo 2010 of the exhibition entitled "L'Italia degli innovatori, le eccellenze tecnologiche del Paese" (The Italy of innovators, the technological excellences of the Country).

Tre Spade represents the typical Italian firm: since the end of 1800 a hothouse of experience, design capability, experimentation, but also of sharing well-being, progress and quality of life.

Takaje is the revolutionary vacuum system, that complies with the most updated customers requests. Takaje not only multiplies by three to five times the food preservation times (even liquid), but it changes any standard glass jar into a vacuum container.

Takaje is the champion of saving, ecology and resources managing, as it cuts down the discards production.

It's an investment in the future, because it's able to drive the user to fair environmental behaviours, due to its patented valve system, that can change a discarded container into a precious vacuum jar.

With Takaje you can also partially and repeatedly eat your food, vacuum keeping its organoleptic characteristics and taste in its own container.

Not only you can avoid any waste, but you'll also improve the food quality, cut down the flow trash and reduce the quantity of raw material used to make new items.

The 2010 Universal Exposition – to be held in Shanghai from May 1st to October 31st 2010 – is an extraordinarily far-reaching international event (200 nations and 70 million participants) and it will be an exceptional occasion to spotlight Takaje, the Italian excellence that stands up to international comparison.
